EXCLUSIVE INSIDER POWER TIPS!

Key

We have included a great deal of information for each game in the Pak Source so, to make it easier to understand, we have put together this key. There is also an alphabetical index on pages 34 and 35 to help you locate any games. Since many games do not easily fit into one category or another, you may need the index to find a particular game. Also keep in mind that Power Meter ratings are assigned when the game is first released. Some of the first older games released may have been rated higher than they would be today, given the current competition.

(The exclusive game tips in Pak Source are printed in a special ink that cannot be photocopied, so these are your secret, insider tips. Guard them closely!)

Power Meter

Ratings range from 1-5 (with 5 being the highest) in the following categories:

- Top: Graphics & Sound -Character and background graphics and background and special effects sounds.
- 2nd: Play Control --Initial feel and overall play control.
- 3rd: Challenge --Lasting interest and difficulty of play.
- 4th: Theme, Fun --Story line, thrill, excitement, overall enjoyment.

Sports

Sports games for the NES bring the action home from the ball park, track, links and even the streets. Some give you control of one athlete while others make you the coach of an entire team. Unlike most adventure and action games, these games are based in everyday reality; in fact, the more real they are the better! With more than 50 sports games to choose from, there is something for everybody.

SPORTS

In all sports games, the computer is programmed to be a tough opponent, especially in the higher difficulty levels. Don't get discouraged if it takes you many games before you're able to beat the CPU opponent. Although it may seem at times that the computer "cheats," any situation can be gotten through with good game play, and that just takes practice.

Family

The entire family can join in the fun with these games, many of which are based on popular TV game shows. Most allow at least two or three person simultaneous play and feature quiz type formats. There are even Junior editions with questions designed for younger players. Here the prize does not go to the quickest thumb in the West, but to the best trivia buff. If you already know everything there is to know, you'll do well in these games.

R.O.B.

R.O.B. stands for Robotic Operating Buddy, an accessory once included with certain NES sets. The idea was to provide an interactive medium between the TV screen and player. In the two robot games listed below, R.O.B. is controlled by the player while the robot's actions affect gameplay on the screen. Sound confusing? It was. A lot of people didn't understand how it worked. (Don't expect to find R.O.B. or these games in the store. Nintendo has no plans to produce future games for R.O.B.)

This game involves stacking up colored blocks to match patterns shown on the screen. Four play modes and the use of R.O.B. add to the challenge.

Setting up R.O.B. can be tricky, especially if you've just purchased him at a garage sale and he didn't come with a manual. Three easy tests can determine if your R.O.B. is functional.

TEST 1: Turn on the on/off switch. If R.O.B. doesn't move at all, or moves very slowly, he needs new batteries. If he has fresh batteries and does not move to the right and up as he opens and closes his hands, his mechanism may be broken. Check the batteries again just to make sure.

TEST 2: Line up R.O.B. directly in front of the TV screen at a distance based on the size of your TV screen:

8 in. screen-- 10 to 12 in. away

13 in. screen-- 1 1/2 to 3 feet away

19 in. screen-- 2 to 3 feet away

25 in. screen-- 2 1/2 to 3 feet away

Over 25 in. screen-- R.O.B. won't work unless modified.

Turn on the game and select TEST mode with the Select Button on the controller. Activate the test by pressing Start. The screen will show a box and will wait for commands. R.O.B.'s light should be solid red. When you press various buttons on the controller, R.O.B. should respond and the screen should display the commands you are giving. If R.O.B. does not function at this point, try him at different distances from the TV, adjusting the brightness. If you still have difficulty getting your R.O.B. to play with you, give Nintendo Consumer Service a call at 1-800-255-3700. A Representative will be happy to give you further assistance.

TEST 3: Select the DIRECT mode by pressing the Select Button and then press Start to activate. The screen will show a box and will wait for commands. R.O.B.'s light should be solid red. When you press various buttons on the controller, R.O.B. should respond and the screen should display the commands you are giving. If R.O.B. does not function at this point, try him at different distances from the TV, adjusting the brightness. If you still have difficulty getting your R.O.B. to play with you, give Nintendo Consumer Service a call at 1-800-255-3700. A Representative will be happy to give you further assistance.

Education/Brain

Educational/Brain games challenge your mind in ways that are fun and fascinating. Traditional strategy games such as chess or Othello can take a lifetime to master, while educational games that teach the basics of reading and writing help prepare young players to win at life. Other games are mind-boggling puzzles, some of them disguised as adventures. Remember, though, you must provide your own thinking cap.

SOME TIPS ON LOCATING HARD-TO-FIND GAME PAKS

To make the Pak Source as complete as possible, we have included every NES game made, starting with the first titles of October 1985 to the most recent games of March 1990. This includes games that were produced some time ago and are no longer scheduled for production. Although some older games are still available, you can generally assume that if a game is over two years old, it will be difficult if not impossible to find. Sometimes, however, there will be that one classic game that you absolutely have to have, but you can't find in any of your local stores.

If you would like help locating a certain game, call Nintendo Consumer Service at 1-800-255-3700. A Representative can do a computerized store search and suggest stores that carry Nintendo merchandise in your area that you may not have checked yet. Individual licensee companies may also have information on the availability of titles they produce.

Nintendo of America Inc. does not sell Game Paks directly to the public; neither do any of Nintendo's licensee companies. The Pak Source is meant as a guide to use in selecting a game, and is not a catalog from which to order Game Paks.

Light Gun

Games for the Zapper Light Gun require a sharp eye and quick reflexes. You actually become part of the action, and the action ranges from quick draw games to mysteries. A few games even utilize both the Zapper and regular controls, but most are strictly target oriented. If your trigger finger is itchy, these games will scratch it.

ZAPPER TROUBLESHOOTING TIPS

Troubleshoot your Zapper Light Gun thoroughly if it seems to be malfunctioning. Adjust the contrast and brightness of your TV as the Light Gun may require different settings than those you use to watch normal TV. The best way to adjust your TV is to play the game while another person does the tuning. Be sure the Zapper is plugged into Port Two on the NES. Check to see if outside light sources are reflecting off the screen. Turn off or dim the lights in the room and close the curtains or draw the blinds. Is anything stuck in the Zapper's barrel?

If you still seem to be having difficulty getting your Zapper to work properly, call

Arcade

Video games first gained popularity in the arcades with imaginative games like Nintendo's Donkey Kong. In fact, arcade hits are still a great source of inspiration for NES titles. Now, with the sophisticated circuitry of the NES, many of those same classic arcade games can be yours. From pinball to Mario, Arcade games offer fast fun and the chance to ring up super scores. Not all games that have appeared in coin-operated format appear here; this section mainly covers those that became classics in the arcades.

Adventure

There is no one single characteristic shared by all Adventure games except that in each you have a mission or quest of some kind. The quests are as varied as human imagination, but most involve defeating a particularly nasty foe after overcoming numerous hardships. Adventure games are balanced between Action and R.P.G.s—with more role playing than Action games and more action than R.P.G.s. Like classic adventures from literature, these games set you in worlds of dark peril or whimsical fantasy. You can stand and fight, or run away to fight another day.

TIPS FOR USING PASSWORDS IN ADVENTURE GAMES

Many Adventure games use a password system that allows you to continue your adventure after you have turned off your game and have come back to it. In Metroid, for example, you will be able to continue with all of the weapons and energy tanks that you have already found. In Kid Icarus you will be able to continue at the beginning of the stage that you were on with all of the items you had when you first entered that stage.

When your game is over, a series of letters and numbers will appear on the screen. This is your password. If you would like to leave the game for a while, carefully write down all of the letters and numbers on a piece of paper. You must make sure that they are all correct so, after you have written them down, check again. When you write down a password, write neatly. If you can't make out what a letter or number is, put a note next to that character. That way if your password doesn't work, you can try a different but similar letter in that space. Once you have the password written down, go ahead and turn the game off.

When you come back to the game, you will have the choice to either "Start" or "Continue". Choose "Continue" and enter the letters and numbers that you received the last time that you played. Then, press the "Start" button and you will be able to resume the game.

Sometimes, however, it seems the system doesn't work. Here are a few quick tips to help you use passwords:

Write neatly and copy carefully. These points can't be stressed enough.

Once you've written down a password, be sure to make a note near it that tells where the password will take you in the game. Many players have special notebooks to organize their passwords in.

If you're at an especially important part of the game, it's a good idea to get a back-up password. Once you have a password written down, play the game again (most games allow you to continue after giving you a password). Get a minor item and lose all your lives on purpose. You'll get another password that will take you to essentially the same place. Write that one down for insurance.

Attention to detail is essential to using passwords correctly. Keep in mind that the Game Play Counselors at most companies will not give out passwords for the simple reason that they don't have lists of them themselves. They can, however, give you helpful advice like the above on using passwords.

Role Playing Games

Role Playing Games, or R.P.G.s, were first made popular with imaginative fantasy games such as Dungeons & Dragons. In most, you control a hero or leader whose abilities are initially limited. As you gain experience, those abilities strengthen and you learn new skills, or even magic. The further you go, the more involving the game becomes. Many R.P.G.s are quest oriented, while in others you must build empires and win wars. There is seldom one right or wrong way of proceeding in these games, so strategy is often the key to success.

WORLD CLASS CONFUSION

The instruction manual for World Class Track Meet may be somewhat misleading in its explanation of how to select the number of players and enter their names.

First, make sure the normal controller is plugged into socket no. 1 and the Power Pad is in socket no. 2. Then, turn the power on. Using the hand-held controller, move the cursor on the title screen down to where it says World Class Track Meet and press the Start Button. The World Class Track Meet menu will appear. On this screen choose one of the events listed by pressing the Select Button, then press the Start Button (try 100M Dash first).

The screen will now read 1 Player(s) at the top. Near the bottom of the screen the numbers 1 thru 6 appear with an arrow under the number 1. Move this arrow under the desired number of players by using left and right on the hand held controller. Press the Select Button. Then press the Start Button. Blanks for the players' names will appear. The A and B Buttons will move the cursor left and right while the directional arrows select the letters to go in the blanks, and the Select Button enters a letter in the blank. After the names are entered, press the Start Button. This will bring up the actual game play screen. To get the game to start, the player(s) must be standing on the Power Pad. This will cause a whistle to sound. When the starter fires his gun, start running.

Action

When Action is the name of the game you can bet that the action will be fast and the challenge great. Quickness, both with the controllers and the brain, is needed to pass the many levels of these games. But the similarities end there. No category of games has as much variety of worlds and characters. Along the way you'll probably find power ups, extra lives, bonuses, and special items.

A great science fiction shoot-em-up with 12 stages of challenges. You have 8 special weapons to help you on your way.

ACTION

Continue codes (or special sequences of commands that let you continue where you left off) are a source of frustration to some players because they can be tricky to enter. The fact of the matter is that continue codes (and stage select codes) often take practice to use since they must be done quickly and accurately to work. For example, the 30 man code in Contra must be entered in its entirety before the title screen comes on!

Although Action games vary a lot in subject matter, most of them challenge your reflexes and gaming skill, not your brain power. In almost every case, there is no trick to an easy victory; only practice will allow you to prevail. But once you learn the pattern of an enemy attack in a game, you'll be able to beat that game every time.
